

Dear Friends,

This time we'll do it different: we'll start with the fun part.

Queens Day,

Being one of the very few countries in the world ruled by a Queen, today is a very special day for the Netherlands. Our Queen Beatrix is celebrating her anniversary. It isn't her own birthday, this day was her mothers (Queen Juliana) birthday. Being born at January 31st she decided to celebrated at April 30th because in January it is much too cold to celebrate this special occasion Nation wide.

Queens Day is a National holiday. It means an extra free day. Nearly every factory closes and banks are not in service. Schools organize special games and every city has its own fare. Many (music) festivals are organized. Shops, restaurants and pubs have a booming business.

Queen Beatrix is related to Willem van Oranje, one of the founders of the Netherlands. In English: Willem van Orange. Maybe his name and being related to him is the reason the official color of the Dutch Royal family is orange. Our national flag is red-white-blue. In case we celebrate something related to the Royal Family we add an orange banner to it. And yes we dress up in orange too.

Being Queen doesn't mean she is 'untouchable'. Not only during Queens Day but more often Queen Beatrix is meeting ordinary people to celebrate and also to talk to them. She still likes to hear the opinion of ordinary people.

In 2013 our Queen will be 75 years old. Six out of ten people think this would be a nice moment to quit. Her son, Willem Alexander, will be 46 by then and more than ready to take over. But lets be honest: we will lose something very special: our Queen. A King is just a King..... Sorry Willem Alexander.

Like last season short breaks are available this year too. In case the Netherlands are only a stop over or the entry port of Europe for you it is possible to join us for a few days. Different than last year: if you like you can join the guided 10 day tour for a few days. Or you can get your own guide to guide you through ‘the Dutch experience’. Again: please send us an e-mail to know more about this possibility. We will explain it to you in detail.
